Residency Overview

Adaptation, Integration, and the Arts Residency

The AIA Residency program has been in existence for two decades, impacting over 9,000 students and hundreds of administrators, teachers, and their surrounding communities.

ART POSSIBLE OHIO
MAKING CREATIVITY ACCESSIBLE

What is Adaptation, Integration, and the Arts (AIA?)

Adaptation, Integration, and the Arts (AIA) uses arts integration and collaboration to improve student success, educator development, and school engagement. The program partners teaching artists and classroom educators for creative residencies for a full school year.

Art Possible Ohio contracts experienced teaching artists to create fruitful residencies in Ohio's schools, for grades Pre-K-12, at no cost to the school.

Residencies are designed to be flexible and adaptable to best serve students with disabilities and inclusive classrooms.

ELIGIBILITY

Eligibility Guidelines

- Due to the mission of the program and funding, at least one-third (1/3) of participating students must have a documented disability, such as an IEP.
- Public and charter schools may apply.
- Residencies may be applied to Pre-K through 12 grades.
- Classroom teachers and administrators must take an active role in supporting the Teaching Artist .

Additional Information

- There are no direct costs to hosting an AIA residency, aside from school and individual time and space commitments.
- Art Possible Ohio pays the teaching artist for services and materials. No funds should be exchanged between the artist and the school.
- All documentation of the AIA residency becomes the property of Art Possible Ohio and may be used for evaluation, reports to funders, and educational marketing materials for the organization.
- Acceptance into the AIA program is 100% funding dependent, and may be amended at any time.
